

From AQUILA Children's Magazine [www.aquila.co.uk] November 2008:

News & events

CYCLING NOMADS

Kelly Jordan is giving up the job she loves, as a primary school teacher, so that she and David Whiddon can cycle a mammoth 15,000 miles, to raise money for a Dorset charity, Julia's House and the international charity, SOS Children's Villages.

Their possible two-year trip will take them from Ushuaia in Argentina to Anchorage, Alaska and on the way they anticipate learning a great deal from the communities they come across. Their aim is to visit the SOS villages to find out how the money they are raising will help them.

Also, hoping to help children understand the links between their own lives and others across the globe, they plan to give talks in schools en route, and create educational packs for schools to use in order to integrate a global perspective into the classroom.

If anyone is interested in sponsoring Kelly and David they can give a donation online www.justgiving.com/cyclingnomads or, for other ways you can help to support them log onto their website www.cyclingnomads.com

The website will be offering regular updates including photographs throughout their trip.